Entrepreneurial leaders do not have a mindset that adapts to failure. Things go wrong, of course, but entrepreneurs don't call them "failures" they call them "glitches, mistakes, bumbles, setbacks" - but not failing.

When one such entrepreneur was asked about the hardest decision he ever had to make, he answered that he didn't know what a hard decision was. An entrepreneur will approach decision-making with the idea that there's a strong likelihood that he/she will be wrong. This doesn't dissuade them - to the contrary they just do the best they can and worry about handling obstacles as they arise.

Here's a few entrepreneurs:

I am Rena Hatch, founder of the Stretch Beyond Stuck Program. Most of my clients are women in their 30s or 40s who are feeling stuck both professionally and personally. I empower them to find their true strengths and communicate with confidence so that they create more successful careers. All of this stems from creating a more powerful, proactive and positive mindset. My clients learn new empowering beliefs in order to naturally take on more successful actions.

As a successful micro-business owner who used to be a stressed, overworked scientist in corporate America, I now share my unique, powerful tools with other women who want more success, confidence and satisfaction in their career (all with less stress and more personal time). My program Stretch Beyond Stuck™ offers step-by-step customized program for each women through a Day Retreat (virtual) with me (by phone). It is a convenient way to learn my powerful tools and how to implement them in your life. I also offer an annual weekend Ocean Retreat for women to relax and immerse themselves in the Stretch Beyond Stuck™ mindset.

Donna Deming, LMSW, Life and Career Coach of <http://www.BreakThroughLifeCoaching.net> offers a complimentary coaching session for anyone interested in working with a coach. Donna will help you to determine where you are going, create an action plan to get there, improve your skills if you need to, master the mental blocks that hold you back and learn to use everything you have available to help you achieve your goal.

Before coming to life coaching most her clients had a goal they wanted to attain (career change, career enhancement) but found themselves overwhelmed by the process involved in attaining it. They also experienced self-doubt and self-defeating thoughts holding them back from taking the necessary steps. Life coaching gave them the structure they needed to actually get into action and breakthrough the self-defeating thoughts.
